

MIDDLE EASTERN WINES

The Phoenicians first established wine-making in what is now Syria and it became an important part of the local culture. The country's wines were renowned around the world, with an annual wine festival normally being held in the town of Swaida (where Hasan is from). However, the country's current and ongoing internal conflicts have not only stopped this festival from happening, but largely have curtailed wine-making in general.

Wine-making is mainly centred around the Latakia province. The temperate climate here and fertile land, combined with long days of sunshine, provide the ideal location for vines and their grapes to flourish.

The region has not been the worst affected by the conflicts, but only one major wine producer is still functioning. The winery of Domaine De Bargylus is still making world-renowned wines, albeit with some major changes. It is owned and run by the Saadé family, who still manage operations but do not remain on the premises. Due to security reasons, they now have to oversee the day to day running of the business remotely from their base in Lebanon. The conflict has taken its toll on the vineyards, with some vines having been destroyed during skirmishes. Despite all the difficulties, wines from Domaine De Bargylus continue to be shipped around the world and have a deservedly high reputation.
